No Waste Engine: Millennial Dawn: <>

1. uses Friction for Positive Work
2. shared switch defeats Action-Reaction
3. Force-Duality generator equals a v/low hysteresis
4. Reverse Hysteresis as Power Source

I wonder how long it will take people {scientists} to realize the Millennial Dawn engine turns Friction into a positive source of Work?

The "positive" accomplished by the ball-to-arm friction -while the balls travel through the arms- all of which Friction is used in returning the moving balls back to their encounter with the second #2 dual-direction generator sitting on the base > .

Every action in the device is a positive? Very possibly. The only loss might be friction in the top hinges from which the arms hang but, being lubed & circular, represents an extremely small resistance to the device's intent. Friction in the #1 top generator can be lowered by using a pump {push-pull} style generator in the stead of using a spinning generator.

The Millennial Dawn engine defeats the usual Action-Reaction negative. Setting of the solenoids to opposed-explosion directions -triggering them to instantaneously same-time-fire by the use of a shared, common switch- creates a simultaneous Action-Action defeat of Action-Reaction. There is no recoil losses in this engine.

The second generator receives input from these opposed-direction returning balls... the duality of added forces allowing the internal hysteresis of the generator to be set extremely low by a low number of windings. The top {first} generator may have a higher hysteresis but it does not matter because it is a power-cycle single revolution power pump for charging the solenoid-source capacitor. ** Any reverse energy generated is "bled off" between cycles so that it does not accumulate a negative resistance from many repeated revolutions.

Reverse energy that can be stored in a battery to be used for other operations.
Millennial Dawn is a "No Waste Engine".

And it isn't Perp:
